

Simply Charlotte Mason presents

Vermeer

Picture Study Portfolios
by Emily Kiser

Breathe a sigh of relief—you, the teacher, don't have to know about art in order to teach picture study!

With Picture Study Portfolios you have everything you need to help your family enjoy and appreciate beautiful art. Just 15 minutes once a week and the simple guidance in this book will influence and enrich your children more than you can imagine.

In this book you will find

- A living biography to help your child form a relation with the artist
- Step-by-step instructions for doing picture study with the pictures in this portfolio
- Helpful Leading Thoughts that will add to your understanding of each picture
- Extra recommended books for learning more about the artist

"We cannot measure the influence that one or another artist has upon the child's sense of beauty, upon his power of seeing, as in a picture, the common sight of life; he is enriched more than we know in having really looked at even a single picture."—Charlotte Mason

Simply
Charlotte Mason
.com

Johannes Vermeer
(1632–1675)

by Emily Kiser

To be used with the Picture Study Portfolio: Vermeer published by Simply Charlotte Mason

Vermeer

© 2016 by Emily Kiser

All rights reserved. However, we grant permission to make printed copies or use this work on multiple electronic devices for members of your immediate household. Quantity discounts are available for classroom and co-op use. Please contact us for details.

Cover Design: John Shafer

ISBN 978-1-61634-359-0 printed

ISBN 978-1-61634-360-6 electronic download

Published by

Simply Charlotte Mason, LLC

930 New Hope Road #11-892

Lawrenceville, Georgia 30045

simplycharlottesmason.com

Printed by PrintLogic, Inc.

Monroe, Georgia, USA

Contents

Picture Study	5
How to use a Picture Study Portfolio	9

Vermeer

The Story of Johannes Vermeer.	11
For Further Reading	14
Vermeer Picture Study	15
The Geographer	16
The Art of Painting.	17
View of Delft	18
Young Woman with a Water Pitcher	19
View of Houses in Delft, known as 'The Little Street'	20
A Woman Holding a Balance	21
Girl with a Pearl Earring	22
The Milkmaid.	23

Picture Study

Why do we do Picture Study?

A Charlotte Mason education is full of variety. Parents spread a feast before their children, giving them endless opportunity to taste, savor, enjoy, discover, and appreciate many different kinds of intellectual food, otherwise known as ideas. Nature study, music, and art are just as important in this balanced feast as math, reading, and science. Picture study doesn't take much time, just fifteen minutes or so each week, but its benefits are far reaching: "We cannot measure the influence that one or another artist has upon the child's sense of beauty, upon his power of seeing, as in a picture, the common sights of life; he is enriched more than we know in having really looked at even a single picture" (Home Education, p. 309).

Charlotte Mason says that it rests with parents and no others to provide an intellectual culture by which she means, "not so much the getting of knowledge, nor even getting the power to learn, but the cultivation of the power to appreciate, to enjoy, whatever is just, true, and beautiful in thought and expression" (Formation of Character, p. 212, emphasis mine).

Through conscientious study of the great masters of art, children take delight in the "just, true, and beautiful" expression that these artists have given us. Charlotte Mason went so far as to tell us that God "whispers in the ear" of the great artists and we owe it to Him to study their works and read their messages rightly (Ourselves, Part 2, p. 102). This ability to appreciate and read a painting rightly is a skill to be developed over time, one that develops naturally as we, the teachers, expose our children to great works of art. "As in a worthy book we leave the author to tell his own tale, so do we trust a picture to tell its tale through the medium the artist gave it" (Towards A Philosophy of Education, p. 216).

How do we do Picture Study?

“But the reader will say, ‘A young child cannot appreciate art; it is only the colour and sentiment of a picture that reach him. . . .’ But, as a matter of fact, the minds of children and of their elders alike accommodate themselves to what is put in their way; and if children appreciate the vulgar and sentimental in art, it is because that is the manner of art to which they become habituated” (Home Education, pp. 307, 308).

Art appreciation is an integral part of the abundant feast that parents should spread before their children. Just as we weed the “twaddle” out of our bookshelves, and replace it with high quality literature, we should be feeding our children’s intellects with high quality art, not “vulgar, sentimental” illustrations that are common in children’s books. Our children are born persons who appreciate real art, from a very young age.

“We recognise that the power of appreciating art and of producing to some extent an interpretation of what one sees is as universal as intelligence, imagination, nay, speech, the power of producing words. But there must be knowledge and, in the first place, not the technical knowledge of how to produce, but some reverent knowledge of what has been produced; that is, children should learn pictures, line by line, group by group, by reading, not books, but pictures themselves” (Towards a Philosophy of Education, p. 214, emphasis mine).

The first step in doing picture study is supplying your children with good art. Charlotte Mason believed that art appreciation, in the form of picture study, should be included in a student’s lessons from the age of six onwards. Each term the student studies six or so works by a single artist. It is not important to study artists in chronological order, and we do not give young children teaching on art history periods; rather, they will assimilate this information as their history reading progresses, and their knowledge of art increases. Breathe a sigh of relief—you, the teacher, don’t have to know about art in order to teach picture study! “[T]he first and most important thing is to know the pictures themselves” (Towards a Philosophy of Education, p. 216). It can be helpful to choose artists to study who painted during, or pictured scenes from, the history period you are studying, although this is not necessary. More important, make sure that the styles of the artists studied during the year are different from one another to avoid confusion for your children.

When we begin to study a new artist Charlotte Mason suggested that we read a short story of that artist’s life. Then we let the children study one picture, silently taking it all in, noticing every detail until they know it and see it in their mind's eye. This type of study will furnish them with a portable gallery hung in their mind that they will carry with them throughout their lives. They will have made connections with hundreds of great works of art over the course of their school studies, and will know these works intimately.

After studying the picture, the reproduction is turned over or hidden from sight, and a six- to nine-year-old then describes what he saw with all the details he took in, maybe drawing a few lines to show where various objects were located—all from memory. An older child adds to this narration a description of the lines of composition, light and shade, and the style of this artist, as he is able. (All of this knowledge comes through the simple study of pictures in this manner, week after week, short after short lesson.) High school students may render in mono-chrome (all one color), and from memory, as many details of the picture as they can remember. Don't have your children attempt to reproduce the picture exactly; Charlotte Mason said this lessens a child's reverence for the artwork (Towards a Philosophy of Education, p. 216).

When the narrations, oral or drawn, are complete, a discussion about the picture may occur. Teachers should keep in mind that they are not the dispensers of knowledge, but should tell the name of the piece and ask the child's response to it. Did you like this painting? What did this picture make you think of? Did it remind you of anything you've read about? These simple questions further a child's interaction with the piece, helping him connect the new painting to his previous knowledge. Many works of art have subjects from literature, mythology, the Bible; your children will recall the stories that they have read or will remember the picture when they do read about the subjects portrayed.

All of these things occur in one short lesson each week. Fifteen or twenty minutes once a week is not hard to fit in, even though your school schedule may seem full. The change in type of lesson, the enjoyment afforded by looking at great art, and the relations your students will make are just some of the rewards you will discover by including picture study in your home school.

How to use a Picture Study Portfolio

1. Read the story.

At the start of the term, read the story of the artist included in this portfolio. It may take one or two lessons to complete the reading, but keep the lessons short—fifteen to twenty minutes maximum. Make sure students narrate the reading, either orally or in written form according to their ability.

2. Select a picture

After this introduction to the new artist for the term, select one picture to study per lesson. Charlotte Mason recommended six different pictures. This allows students to become familiar with the style of the artist, after even just six pictures they will recognize paintings they have not seen before as the work of an artist they have studied. We have included more than six pictures so that you may choose which you would like to study. There is no particular order to the pictures; it isn't necessary to study some over others. The choice is yours; select pictures that appeal to you and your children. Spread the individual works out over the term, or introduce one painting each week for six weeks and then allow the students quiet time over the remaining weeks to look over the pictures at their leisure.

3. Do a picture study.

During the picture study lesson follow these steps:

- Ask the children to tell you about the picture you looked at last time. If this is the first picture study of the term, ask them to tell you a little about the artist's life, where he was from, or something else they remember about him.

- Before they look at the picture, you may want to tell them how large the actual work is, comparing it to some object they are familiar with. Do not tell them the title yet.
- Have the children look at the picture silently for 3–5 minutes, looking closely at all the details in the painting until they can see it in their mind's eye. Have them check to make sure they can see the whole picture with their eyes closed.
- Next, ask the student(s) to narrate the picture, telling as much as they can about the painting. If you are doing picture study with more than one child, start with one and stop him after he has narrated some of the picture, then have the next child add to his sibling's narration. Older students may do a drawing of the piece from memory if they are able.

4. Have a Picture Talk.

Last, have a “Picture Talk.” Now tell the children the title of the work. Does this shed any light on what they thought was happening in the picture? What do they think of this picture? Do they like it? How does it make them feel? Can they tell what time of day it is? This is not a time to quiz the student(s) on what they may have missed; it is a time for them to engage and contemplate the picture further. Charlotte Mason tells us that questions about what they think never bore the students, but quizzing them does! If there is a story behind the picture, you may want to look that up and read it if there is time. But keep the lesson short!

5. Display the picture in your home.

Put the picture of the week on display somewhere in your home where everyone can see it.

That's all there is to it. Enjoy this course of your educational feast. Your family will be blessed by having “a couple of hundred pictures by great masters hanging permanently in the halls of [your] imagination” (Towards a Philosophy of Education, p. 43).

The Story of Johannes Vermeer

by Emily Kiser

So little is known about Johannes Vermeer that he almost seems to belong to that age when artists dedicated their work to God, without a thought to personal fame. No record exists of their lives. We do not know the names or details of the lives of the men whose work adorns the great cathedrals of Europe. They have left their legacy in the faces of their figures painted and carved on those enormous walls. This is almost, but not quite, true of the Dutch painter Vermeer.

Most of the details of Vermeer's life are lacking from historic record, but we can know a bit about how he became such a great painter. Vermeer could not have been better placed, in location and history, to become an artist. The Netherlands had gained its freedom from Spanish rule when Johannes was sixteen years old; superior sea power and a thriving shipping trade made her the most prosperous nation in Europe. Meanwhile, the effects of the Reformation were being felt in the art world, especially in the countries of Northern Europe. The Church was no longer the largest commissioner of art. In fact, many Dutch churches had no decoration inside them whatsoever, since the Protestant Reformers associated church art with many of the abuses they were reacting against. In response to the lack of religious commissions, artists began to make paintings for private citizens, and, luckily for Vermeer, many private citizens in The Netherlands wanted art for their homes. The Dutch middle class had more money than their counterparts in other times and places, and they wanted to spend some of that money making their homes more beautiful. Holland produced more, and better, artists during the seventeenth century than anywhere else on earth in the span of just one century.

Johannes was born in 1632 in Delft, a city in South Holland, the son of a silk-weaver turned inn-keeper and art dealer. Delft, famous for its distinct blue pottery, called delftware,

For Further Reading

If you are interested in reading more about Johannes Vermeer, check your library for the following resources:

Johannes Vermeer (Getting to Know the Great Artists of the World), Mike Venezia (Children's Press, 2002)

This series is well-loved by younger readers.

Famous Old Masters of Painting, Roland McKinney (Dodd, Mead & Co., 1969)

Chapter biographies of several famous artists describe the artist's life and several of his works.

Vermeer Picture Study

Choose six of the following pictures to study with your students; select those you like best, or that your students will enjoy the most. There is no order to the following pages, though the first few pictures are generally the artist's best known works; the extra pictures are included to give you options when choosing pieces to study.

In each lesson, use the "Leading Thoughts" to lead your students in a Picture Talk after they have studied the piece and given their narrations. You may choose to talk about or ask any, all, or none of the questions and comments. These are included to provide any helpful information that you and your students may not be familiar with, and to draw your attention to significant points of the work of art. Remember not to lecture your students; ask them what they think of the painting. After even a short time you will be amazed at the number, and quality, of relations your students will have formed with great artists and their works!

The Geographer

1669, oil on canvas, 20.9" x 18.3"

Städelsches Kunstinstitut, Frankfurt

Present this picture as described on pages 9 and 10.

Leading Thoughts

To live in seventeenth-century Holland was to be interested in the wide-reaches of the globe. Though tiny in land area, The Netherlands held supreme power over the sea, and her ships roamed farther abroad than any other in that day. The Dutch East India Company controlled most of the foreign trade in Europe. During the Age of Exploration (mainly the previous century), the boundaries of the world had become known, and the Dutch people were familiar with not only the goods arriving from far-off lands, but with men who had traveled to these places and told of their journeys. Map-making, or cartography as we call it today, became more and more accurate in the early 1600s.

This man is wearing the robe of a scholar and displays an attitude of intent fascination with his subject. Do you think it significant that Vermeer has painted him gazing out the window?

The writing on the wall behind the figure is the signature of the artist (J. Ver Meer) and the date the painting was executed. This is one of only three dated pieces by Vermeer. If your family has studied Jan van Eyck using the Simply Charlotte Mason Picture Study Portfolios, you may want to compare the signature in his Arnolfini Portrait with Vermeer's in The Geographer.